

Airbag Type Vest Unveiled in Seattle for Motorcycle Riders

Inflatable vests...for riders? This type of safety gear has been around for a while, but a new revolutionary technology recently debuted in Seattle that would allow motorcycle riders to utilize inflatable safety vests! In the past, vests or jackets like these required a rider to be tethered to their motorcycle, but with the new safety vest jackets it does NOT require a rider to be tethered to their bike. The vest uses accelerometers and gyroscopes in the jackets seven sensors to determine when you have come off the seat or are in a dangerous situation.

This new technology allows a rider to be protected on both the front and back and also on some of the shoulders too. It is said that when the vest deploys, a rider is seven times more protected than when you wear regular riding protection. The bag inflates in 40 milliseconds when impact is detected, which is much faster than the old tether system. The vest can be worn under your normal riding jacket.

The new Dainese Smart Jacket costs around $700. The old tethered version costs about $400. If you are an avid rider, we recommend you check these out!
